honoring denominational roots, he proposes a bold vision to reverse this trend by starting new congregations and reinventing declining ones. Based on a “Great Commission’ agenda, his work is theologically sound, challenging, and exciting. His proposal for church planting, if thoroughly implemented, would require a massive transformation at every level of the church. Crompton’s vision, based on successful experience over-seeing multiple new church starts every year, is both feasible and valuable.” This is a remarkable resource for anyone concerned about the future of the church. Alban Institute
